

CONNECTING WORKER'S STRUGGLES AND BUILDING SOLIDARITY

- We will analyze how the current immigration policy brings in more temporary workers and less permanent residents; and how this policy is a form of contracting out that impacts not only temporary migrant workers, but all workers.
- We will examine current organizing principles and practices and how they support the building of a broad-based workers movement that includes all workers.
- We will explore new ways of organizing by identifying how union members can practice true solidarity with precarious, migrant, and workers without jobs in the workplace and in the community.
